TRANSATIANTIC SKETCHES. - Under this head Dr. Mackay the editor of the London Hustrated News, is publishin pleasant letters from this country, illustrated by engra vings. In the News of February 13th, is one of thes illustrated pen-sketches, describing the interview between the President and the Indian delegations, on the 14th of January. The illustrations give a better idea of the Indiana than of the President, but the accompanying description is very good. As the ceremony was described in the Union at the time, we will only extract one para-graph from Dr. Mackay's letter:

graph from Dr. Mackay's letter:

"At twelve o'clock precisely the President entered the east room, and took his position in the centre of a square, of which the Indians formed three sides and the speciators the fourth. The Indians, who till this time had been silent and wondering spectators of the rich carpet, the cultained windows, and gilded cornices of the reception room—no doubt the most magnificent specimens of the white man's wealth, power, and ingenuity which their eyes had till that moment beheld—turned their looks to the President, but made no motion or gesture, and uttered no sound, expressive either of their curiosity or the respect which they evidently fest. The President's head leans slightly on his shoulder, and this little defect added to his kindliness of expression and his venerable white hair, gives him the appearance of still greater benignity—and as if he were bending his head purposely to listen to the complaints, the requests, or the felicitations of those who have occasion to address him. The four chiefs of the Pawnees and the twelve men of the tribe were severally introduced to the President, who cordially shook hands with them, looking all the time as if he really felt that paternal interest in their character which his position commanded, but which he was not able to express to them in their own language. On one findian of this tribe a doct hat very large and the such farty ears of age. commanded, but which he was not solve to express or them in their own language. On one Indian of this tribe, a short but well-formed man, about fifty years of age, and deeply pitted with the smallpox, and who wore hu-man scalps after the fashton of epudets, besides a whole breastplate of such ghastly adornments, and held in his hand a war-club thickly studded with brass nails, and hand a war-cano thickly studied with brass hairs, and who was introduced by the interpreter as the braves of his people—'le plus brave des braves,' the Marshal Ney of his race—who had taken more scalps than any living Indian whom he knew, the President seemed to look with more than common interest. The eyes of all present were directed towards this redoubtable chief; but there was nothing forbidding, nothing ferocious, in his appearance. His face and bearing expressed stoical endurance ance. His face and bearing expressed stoical endurance and resolute self-reliance, but neither cruelty nor cunning. The Poncas and their chief went through the same cere mony, and met with the same reception; and even the mibidden Pottowotamies were welcomed by their 'Great Father' as kindly as if they had been regularly invited to his presence. Mr. Buchanan all the while wearing that good humored smile which seems natural to him. It was obvious that he was quite as much interested in his red children as they were in their white father; as none could help being who was a witness of the scene.

SMITHSONIAN LECTURES. - Before the lecturer came in or Wednesday, Professor Henry appeared upon the rostrum and offered some very timely remarks on the importance of order and decorum in the lecture-room. He alluded to the annoying practices which were too common at the ectures of holding private conversations while the lecturer is addressing the audience, and of leaving the lectureroom before the exercises were through. He said the lec tures were intellectual entertainments, intended for the gratification and improvement of inquiring minds, and if there were any present who were not intellectual, but were determined to show disrespect to the lecturer, and to disturb those who were well disposed, they had better withdraw before the lecture. As none of those present wished to place themselves in the category of the unintellectual, all kept their seats, and order was maintained throughout the evening. Rev. Dr. McIlvaine's third and last lecture, in contin uation of the subject of comparative philology and of language in general, will be delivered this (Friday) evening and we advise the lecture-going public at Washington, both ladies and gentlemen, not again to forego the pleasure and advantage to be reaped from attending.

ARTISTS' CONVENTION. - We see it stated in several papers published at a distance, that the artists of this city have called a "convention," which is to assemble at thi metropolis. We think that there must be some mistake about this, at least so far as a majority of the artists here are concerned. Neither do we believe that it would be practicable to assemble a respectable number of the prominent artists of the country, and unless all sections an all classes of art were represented, the convention could be of no possible utility, and would excite ridicule rather than advance art.

THEATRICAL. - Mr. Couldock won additional laurels last night by his personation of Louis XI of France, as represented in Sir Walter Scott's Quentin Durward. Mr Eytinge had put the play on the stage in excellent style, adding to its historic interest, and the au i once testified their approbation by continued rounds of applause,

To-night Mr. Couldock will app at as John Mildmay, in "Still Waters Run Deep," and Miss St. Clair as Sally Scrage, in "Life in India." On Monday Mr. Mathews makes his bow before our metropolitan audience, and will doubtless attract crowd-

gent of this review.
